WEATHER SYNOPSIS BY REGION

NORTHERN CALIFORNIA

 Gusty W-SW winds and low relative humidity (RH) Far Eastside next two afternoons ***

 Gusty SW-NW Winds Thursday, Followed by More N Winds Fri-Sun ***

Periods of gusty winds and low humidity will occur during the next 4 to 6 days across the Northern California region. Residual breeziness with humidity values falling into the teens will occur across the Far Eastside today. Wind gusts between 20 to 25 mph can be expected this afternoon there. The stronger wind day across the Far Eastside will occur Wednesday due to strengthening winds ahead of a trough passage. Gusts up to 30 mph with teen humidities should occur and a High Risk may be needed for the Far Eastside then. The strongest winds elsewhere the next couple of days will be found across the Greater Bay area due to the higher humidity and cooler Delta Breeze. Temperatures will be near to slightly above normal during this time frame.

The Pacific trough will shift eastward on Thursday and begin a more broad N-NW flow across the majority of the area. Gusts up to 25 mph possible across portions of the Coastal Range and NW mountains. Humidity values will be marginally low with values between 20 to 30% across a broad area although the coastline will experience locally higher values due to onshore flow. Temperatures will be near normal.

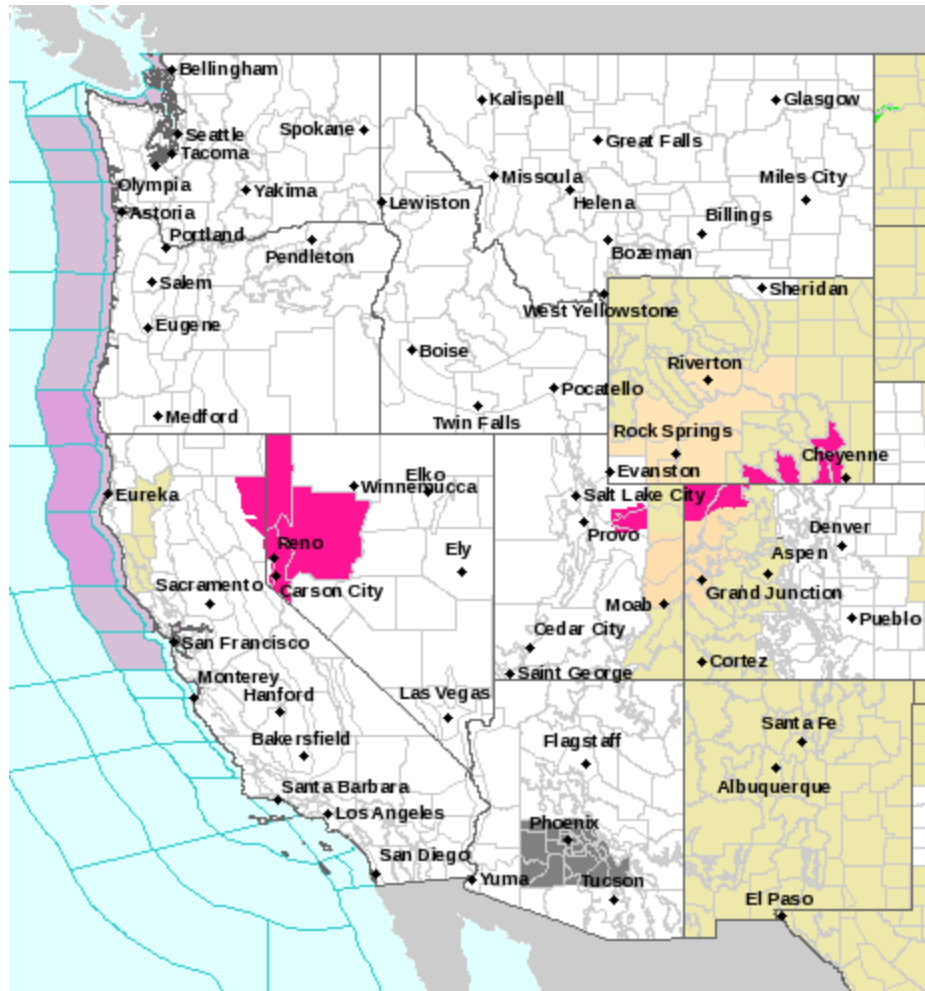

N-NE winds should increase across the region on Friday as high pressure builds behind the departing trough. Gusts up to 30 mph possible with lowering humidity. A High Risk may be needed for parts of the area, especially Sacramento Valley Friday into Friday night so stay tuned. Residual N-NE breeziness should continue into the weekend, especially overnight periods, but lessen each day overall. Temperatures Friday through weekend will trend warmer across central and western areas and become above normal between 5-10 degrees while the far East cools slightly.

SOUTHERN CALIFORNIA

Typical summer-like conditions will continue across the region during the next couple of days as high pressure remains centered over the Southwestern United States. Daytime highs today and Wednesday will be in the 70s to mid-80s in the mountains, 80s to mid-90s in the valleys, and near 110 across the eastern deserts. Winds will generally be light today across the region except for some gusty conditions during the late afternoon and evening hours across the Antelope Valley and the Mojave. Along the coast, light to moderate sea breezes can be expected in the afternoons with low clouds and fog keeping skies mostly cloudy through the mid-morning hours. A trough will form over the West Coast by Thursday which will help bring cooler weather to all of the region along with increasing winds. Daytime highs will drop to levels that will be slightly below normal for this time of year. Southwest to northwest winds will increase across the mountains and deserts with the strongest winds expected over the Mojave as well as over the higher elevations of the Sierra. The marine layer will increase with night and morning low clouds becoming more prevalent west of the coastal ranges. This weekend, the trough will move east as high pressure noses into the region from the Pacific. Winds will diminish throughout the area as a result and a warming and drying trend will begin Saturday.
